The Blythe area has over 3,000 acres of industrially zoned land at prices that are significantly lower than similar land in Southern California. Blythe's relative location to growing major markets makes it attractive for manufacturing and distribution industries interested in the benefits of Blythe's convenience to Southern California, Arizona, New Mexico and Mexico. Blythe lies ¼ mile within the 100 km free trade zone established by the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), which places the Blythe Municipal Airport in a prime location as a potential hub for international trade. The airport facility encompasses 3,904 acres and is served by access from Interstate 10 - less than one mile from the airport entrance. The airport's main airstrip is 6,562 feet in length and is designated D II. The Airport Master Plan calls for ultimate airstrip length of 10,012 feet and a designation of D V.
